BACKGROUND INFO

The Carson Block Building and the Ingomar Theater is a 51,544 square foot Nationally Registered historical building in Old Town, Eureka. The Carson Block served as the hub of cultural and social activity of the region through the first part of the 20th century. The building was designed by Samuel Newsom and constructed in 1892 of local redwood and pressed brick in the Queen Ann architectural style. The wood facade was graced with terra cotta panels, copper flashing, numerous bay and arched windows and three turrets. The purpose of this project is to reconstruct the facade of the Carson Block which was drastically altered during a modernization in the 1950's, in which the decorative panels and one turret were removed and stucco added to cover the original wood exterior.
